After your billing data is processed, AWS Cost Anomaly Detection runs approximately three times a day in order to monitor for anomalies in your net unblended cost data (that is, net costs after all applicable discounts are calculated). You might experience a slight delay in receiving alerts. Cost Anomaly Detection uses data from Cost Explorer, which has a delay of up to 24 hours. As a result, it can take up to 24 hours to detect an anomaly after a usage occurs. If you create a new monitor, it can take 24 hours to begin detecting new anomalies. For a new service subscription, 10 days of historical service usage data is needed before anomalies can be detected for that service.

3. The duration of time you commit to keeping the Provisioned Throughput. The longer the commitment duration, the more discounted the hourly price becomes. You can choose between the following levels of commitment:
    - No commitment – You can delete the Provisioned Throughput at any time.
    - 1 month – You can't delete the Provisioned Throughput until the one month commitment term is over.
    - 6 months – You can't delete the Provisioned Throughput until the six month commitment term is over.
